

I think this rule needs clarification. I am an independent flight instructor who gives recurrent training on a very part time basis to pilots who typically own their own plane. They are all US citizens...I should not have to register with the TSA and maintain proof of citizenship if I provide an hour or two of training to an already certified pilot. The services I provide enhance aviation safety. This extra layer of security does nothing to help add to the security of our country.

This rule should be amended to exempt independent flight instructors who are providing recurrent training and/or training to get advanced ratings to already certified pilots who are U.S. citizens. There should be no need for us to register with the TSA or to maintain proof of U.S. citizenship.
